When Love Hurts

Other authors also found no statistical differences in the nutritional status of patients evaluated in private or public general hospitals. The average age in our study is below the one reported in other European studies [14]. Patients who are malnourished or at risk should be screened in the first days after admission to the hospital, so that an objective and timely assessment can be performed and nutritional problems can be prevented or corrected. Two instruments, SGA and NRS, were used to assess the nutritional status in our study; both have been widely discussed in various reports [10,11]. Another finding from the study is that nutritional screening or assessment should be part of the clinical record and enforced in the first 24 to 48 hours. This fact was associated with an increase of the nutritional risk and is added to the impact of fasting periods for diagnostic or therapeutic procedures. Another important point is that the prevalence of patients at nutritional risk using NRS. Olivares reports a prevalence of 10% in both studies, while weight registration increases ELAN. The prevalence of malnutrition slightly decreases ELAN. The only explanation for these differences is the educational influence FELANPE has had in recent years through the basic courses offered to doctors, nutritionists, nurses and pharmacists [Jensen et al.]. The geography of conservatism also helps to explain its optimism rather than pessimism.
